Warning Gonzalez

THE LANGUAGE WAS CLEAR AND UNMISTAKABLE. The Supreme Court ruled last Friday that the Department of Justice had pursued a fatally flawed case against Crispin Beltran and five other leftist party-list congressmen and their co-accused for well over a year, out of "political considerations." The introduction of political objectives into a legal case "trivialized" the administration of justice, the Court said, and in the process undermined public confidence in the rule of law.

EDITORIAL

The high court's decision in Beltran vs People of the Philippines was a stinging rebuke to Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez and his prosecutors, not least because the Court's Second Division, speaking through Associate Justice Antonio Carpio, made special mention of the landmark ruling in the March 1988 case of Tatad vs Sandiganbayan. It is a case Gonzalez should be intimately familiar with.

The Court pinpointed three issues at stake in the consolidated cases and then, one by one, found against the justice department.

The Court ruled that the inquest proceeding versus Beltran for rebellion was invalid. "The joint affidavit of Beltran's arresting officers states that the officers arrested Beltran, without a warrant, for Inciting to Sedition, and not for Rebellion. Thus, the inquest prosecutor could only have conducted—as he did conduct—an inquest for Inciting to Sedition and no other. Consequently, when another group of prosecutors subjected Beltran to a second inquest proceeding for Rebellion, they overstepped their authority rendering the second inquest void."

The Court ruled that no probable cause existed to indict Beltran for rebellion. "The evidence before the panel of prosecutors who conducted the inquest of Beltran for Rebellion consisted of the affidavits and other documents attached to the CIDG letters. ... The allegations in these affidavits are far from the proof needed to indict Beltran for taking part in an armed public uprising against the government."

The Court ruled that the justice department had prejudged the case against Beltran and the other leftist party-list congressmen. "Indeed, by peremptorily issuing the subpoenas to petitioners, tolerating the [Department of Justice's] antics during the investigation, and distributing copies of a witness' affidavit to members of the media knowing that petitioners have not had the opportunity to examine the charges against them, respondent prosecutors not only trivialized the investigation but also lent credence to petitioners' claim that the entire proceeding was a sham."

Antics, trivialization, sham: Strong language, and tonic for those who run to the courts for relief against the abuses of any government. But there is more.

The Court admonished Gonzalez personally for issuing the following statement on the day of the preliminary investigation: "We will just declare probable cause, then it's up to the Court to decide." (Emphasis in the Supreme Court decision.) The Court ruled: "This clearly shows prejudgment, a determination to file the Information even in the absence of probable cause."

It is also, in our view, a culpable abuse of the department's power to prosecute. It opens the door to legalized harassment, with the victims left to flounder, or perhaps even to sink or swim, in the country's courts.

The Supreme Court has time and again ruled against politically motivated prosecution. Almost 20 years ago, in the Tatad case, the Court ruled that the Tanodbayan had sat on the preliminary investigation involving former Marcos Cabinet secretary (and future senator) Francisco Tatad. In his ponencia, Carpio quoted a key paragraph of that decision: "we cannot emphasize too strongly that prosecutors should not allow, and should avoid, giving the impression that their noble office is being used or prostituted, wittingly or unwittingly, for political ends, or other purposes alien to, or subversive of, the basic and fundamental objective of observing the interest of justice evenhandedly, without fear or favor to any and all litigants alike, whether rich or poor, weak or strong, powerless or mighty."

Gonzalez, who served as Tanodbayan from 1986 to 1988, inherited the case. Could he have already forgotten its lessons?

Congratulations to Mayor Lim and My Manila

SEPARATE OPINION

Isagani A. Cruz

Lim will have a mammoth task in coping with the complex problems of the capital city of the Philippines

I REJOICE WITH SEN. ALFREDO S. LIM FOR his landslide election as mayor of Manila. It is a deserved victory not only for him but for the City of Manila.

I'd call it also My Manila, as I wrote in this column on June 24, 1995. It was there that I was born, grew up, went to school, became a lawyer, married my Sally, raised all our five sons, formed many cherished friendships, and lived a contented life for all of 61 years.

In the district of Pandacan, my father acquired the small rigas-roofed house where our family lived. ... My father was then working as a councilor for 20 years.

It was in that year that my new family transferred from Manila to a new subdivision where our growing boys would enjoy more healthful surroundings. ...

We were not bothered there by the roar of the airplanes flying directly overhead ... "Balut, penoy!" and "Pan, kaldero!" all hours of the day—and night—in Manila. ...

The cozy homey visions we lived. ...

years later for a sentimental visit, I was deeply disappointed. I recognized no one and nobody recognized me. ... The classes and ... had also disappeared.

This is also my 31st year in what is now Parañaque City that offers the convenience of metropolitan life. ...

I campaigned in fact for Senator Lim ... That is why I was much elated when I learned he had won and that his opponents had graciously conceded his victory. It was a fair fight without the usual anomalies associated with past elections. The honesty of his triumph made it all the more acceptable.

Fred Lim has served as mayor of Manila before, and I am confident that he will perform as well, now if not better because of his experience as a member of the Senate. ...

Lim will have a mammoth task in coping with the complex problems of the capital city of the Philippines. ...

His record as an executive is well known. It is direct and resolute as demonstrated by his controversial order ... drug problem. ...

I myself believed the order to be unconstitutional but it did not lessen my support for Mayor Lim's campaign against drug addiction in our favorite city. ...

Congratulations, Mayor Alfredo S. Lim, and the most prayerful wishes for your success in rehabilitating, protecting and improving your and my Manila!

Stop counting

MOMENTS

Fr. Jerry M. Orbos, SVD

THE STORY IS TOLD THAT IN A RECENT gathering of theologians, the mystery of the Trinity was discussed again, and, as usual, they found themselves in a deadlock when it came to explaining the mathematical equation 1 + 1 + 1 = 1. According to the story, an exasperated theologian then stood up and said: "Dear colleagues, we can never resolve this (mystery). Perhaps, the only way we can resolve this mystery is to let the Creator do the counting."

* * *

Today is Trinity Sunday. In today's Gospel (Jn. 16, 12-15) Jesus tells His disciples, "I have much more to tell you, but you cannot bear it now." If we approach the mystery of the Trinity as a mathematical question, we will never understand it. But if we look at it as a relationship, then we can get involved in it. Understand the Trinity? Forget it. Get involved in the Trinity? Now, you got it!

Understanding the mystery of the Trinity is not so much in the thinking, as in being involved in. Instead of trying to fit the 1 + 1 + 1 equation in our narrow minds, let's just fit in, and be a part of the Trinitarian circle of love. Yes, let's be involved and become a part of that relationship ...

Just how do we relate to and with the Trinity? The Father, Son and Holy Spirit are distinct, but not separate from each other ... Rather, it is a relationship that is dynamic and alive. ...

relate to them equal in majesty, undivided in splendor, one God and Lord of us all.

If you find it hard to relate with the Trinity, maybe it is because you are too proud, and cerebral. ... Stop counting. Just come in, and be counted!

We are supposed to emulate and live out the Trinitarian life and love with our brothers and sisters. In the Trinity, there is basic respect for one another. Perhaps we can start respecting one another instead of imposing ourselves on one another. ...

* * *

People who play the game of control should learn from the Trinity. There is no power play or manipulation within the Trinity. ... stop controlling a person, stop controlling a relationship, stop controlling people, stop controlling a nation and stop controlling God. You can't. Even if you can, it will not be for long.

* * *

Last Friday, I experienced the Trinitarian presence and love at a Mass held at St. Theresa's College, Quezon City. It was organized by the fellow teachers of Cora Puertas who is sick of cancer. ... I saw how the love and care these teachers have for one another ... of living in the concrete love and presence of the Trinity.

I am experiencing a "lockdown" of ... our retirement house due to the repairs going on in our Mission House. ...

* * *

Summer is gone. It's back to school again for the children. God with you, dear parents and teachers, who continue the work of love, in season and out of season. The Trinitarian love must flow and move on.

A moment with the Lord:

Lord, help me to stop counting and to start, instead, being counted in your Trinitarian circle of love. Amen.

This has been true since global warming became a more realistic threat in the forms of tsunamis and hurricanes.
